The Bookworm Story

A year and a half ago, a meeting took place between Jason Blumberg, President, and CEO of Global Vending Group Inc.(GVG) and the Assistant Principal of Arthur O. Eve School of Distinction #61 from the Buffalo NY school district. During the meeting, they discussed their vision to bring books and families together.

The Assistant Principal of Arthur O. Eve School of Distinction #61 explained that there is a literacy challenge within his school district. This challenge is partially due to a lack of engagement and excitement in reading books. He believed increased reading comprehension and engagement will make a serious impact on the children's future. He felt that getting students excited to read by vending their favorite books and being able to take it home will not only help increase a child's literacy but also improve family relationships through reading.

Mr. Blumberg took this to heart and worked extensively to make this dream a reality. GVG customized a vending machine called the Bookworm to vend books using a golden token. The machine works by using a special golden token the kids are rewarded with for good behavior. This Bookworm machine is currently in action at Arthur O. Eve School of Distinction #61 and many other schools throughout the US. The engagement rate has been remarkable as more and more students are racing to the vending machine to get their favorite books. As more books are being distributed new books are taking their place, creating endless opportunities for children to learn and get engaged. We believe that this combination of vending books and reward system could bridge the gap between literacy and engagement.

Global Vending Group is proud to be a part of something greater than ourselves. We believe social responsibility should be a big part of any company, which is why we take pride in using our resources to take a step in the right direction towards literacy for all students. This program is just one way we can better prepare children for the future ahead.

If you believe this program could be beneficial to your school, please call or email us anytime, we would be more than happy to help. Together we can promote literacy for all!
